INFORMATION BECOMES INTELLIGENCE WHEN EXAMINED AND DEVELOPED.

We have all witnessed something in our daily lives which seemed to either be “out of place” or “rather suspicious”. Unfortunately, many times our suspicions are quieted by a feeling of doubt or remaining uninvolved and not exasperating the situation. It’s not until later we discover our observations of suspicious situations are correct and may have been mitigated if they were reported immediately. Suppose you could prevent the serious injury or death of another person by merely articulating your observations to the proper authorities. Could you step up and do what is right?

A brave New Mexico land owner decided that what he observed was worth reporting and potentially saving the life of others.... he was correct! This concerned citizen may have stopped a future multi-level attack against school aged children and young adults. Protecting our country, state, city, and community isn’t the sole responsibility of law enforcement officials. Taking ownership of others well-being and safety through situational awareness broadens and strengthens the circle of safety we all wish to stand in every day. Become situationally aware. You may save someone’s life.
